A seal is a device for making an impression in wax, clay, paper, or some other medium, including an embossment on paper, and is also the impression thus made. The original purpose was to authenticate a document, a wrapper for one such as a modern envelope, or the cover of a container or package holding valuables or other objects. The seal-making device is also referred to as the seal matrix or die; the imprint it creates as the seal impression. If the impression is made purely as ...

Using remote seals and capillary tubes filled with nice, clean oil neatly solves the problem, containing the process fluid within the seals and not allowing it to enter the tubing. Another, entirely different, reason for using remote seals is in food processing, where no "pockets" are allowed in the fluid system due to the need for regular disinfection and decontamination.
